

EXT. NEIGHBORHOOD - NIGHT

A quiet residential street lined with snow-dusted pine trees.

Jimmy carries a cold can of Glacier Brew under his arm as he walks.

Next to the porch sits a heavy metal cooler, the Glacier Brew logo embossed across the front lid.

Overhead, glowing above the rooftops, a massive neon Glacier Brew billboard illuminates the street corner.

Affixed to a nearby lamppost is a Coldpeak Safety Placard displaying municipal notices.

JIMMY

Well, it certainly is a chilly night for a walk.

JENNY

At least you brought your favorite refreshments along.

JIMMY

You know I never head out without them.

EXT. NEIGHBORHOOD CORNER - CONTINUOUS

Jimmy and Jenny reach the busy intersection as a light fog rolls in.

On the side of a parked news vehicle, a mounted screen displays archival footage of Senator Dana Whitlock addressing a press conference. Jimmy sees down the pack and reaches for another can of Glacier Brew to pass to Jenny.

JENNY

Look at that screen. Is that the local broadcast?

JIMMY

Looks like an archival clip from last year's campaign.

JENNY

Things sure have changed since then.

JIMMY

Some things change, but good beer stays the same.

INT. LIVING ROOM - LATER THAT NIGHT

A warm living room with a stone fireplace crackling gently.

Through the floor-to-ceiling panoramic window, the Aurora Pavilion glows against the dark mountain ridge.

From a vintage wooden radio in the corner, the soft orchestral melody of Northern Lights Waltz by The Frostline Quartet fills the room. Jenny places a chilled can of Glacier Brew onto the coffee table beside a bowl of pretzels.

JENNY

The view of the pavilion from here is spectacular.

JIMMY

Nothing beats relaxing here after a long trek.

JENNY

Pass me one of those, would you?

Jenny catches the can smoothly and pops the tab with a satisfying hiss.
She takes a slow sip of the cold Glacier Brew, leaning back into the sofa cushions.

JENNY

Now that hits the spot. Crisp and refreshing.

JIMMY

That is the mountain taste right there.

Jimmy raises his can in a quiet toast. Jenny clinks hers against it.

JIMMY (CONT'D)

Here is to smooth clearances and clean scripts.

JENNY

I will drink to that.

They sit in comfortable silence as the fire flickers and the snow falls softly outside the window.

FADE OUT.